Bob's follow-up ideas:

I've been thinking about how a really fun secret Santa game that we've played at un-distanced parties might work online and struck out. Every option was too hard/awkward.

As an alternative, how about door prizes? Tickets in beer flight

- draw a name every 15 minutes; 8-10 items total (might keep people engaged)
- some might be gag prizes, others could be something nice like a bag of Admiral Malt
- we dedicate some club funds for this

Another idea could be a "flea market/auction." If any members have any nice, but unused equipment that they'd be willing to donate (I know that I do) they'd be offered to the group.

- like the door prizes, these would be spread out throughout the period of the party
- there would be pictures/descriptions of the items
- bidding on each item would involve a $10 entry fee that would be a donation to Uncommon Law
 - if there's only one bidder for an item, they win it
 - if there are multiple bidders, the winner could be decided by a goofy trivia question or something
 - ...perhaps, if there are no bidders, the donor is fined $10 for trying to scam a free bulky item pickup...
- pickup of the item would be the responsibility of the winning bidder
